

Sudden Wealth: What Should You Do If You Strike It Rich?

If a million dollars—or more—fell into your lap tomorrow, what would you do?

Sudden wealth isn't a common or reliable way to get rich, but it can and does happen. Some big drivers of sudden wealth include:

- Receiving a substantial inheritance
- Getting a major settlement in a divorce or a lawsuit
- Receiving a big payout because of stock options or the sale of your company

But while sudden wealth may sound like a dream come true, it's often accompanied by serious challenges resulting from the "sudden" aspect of that money. With sudden wealth, everything about being rich—the good and the bad—happens all at once. In contrast, most people who build wealth slowly are able to address issues and concerns incrementally over time.

The result: Sudden wealth can be an emotionally challenging and an overwhelming experience. Sometimes there are emotional challenges because of the source of the money—a relative who died, or no longer running the business that you founded. Feelings of anxiety or sadness can go hand in hand with the feelings of relief and excitement. All those swirling emotions can cause recipients of sudden wealth to make bad—sometimes exceptionally bad—decisions about their new wealth and about their lives.

Here's a look at how you—or someone you care about, such as your children—can prepare to deal with sudden wealth effectively to realize amazing opportunities while avoiding the many pitfalls of "striking it rich."

Relationship challenges of sudden wealth

To be sure, getting rich quickly can solve many financial problems. At the same time, getting rich quickly can create big problems in your relationships with other people—including the people in your life you care about most.

Some examples:

- Family and friends may knock on your door looking for funds from someone they now see as a financial "white knight"
- A sibling might be looking for an investor in her new business
- A distant relative might ask for help paying medical bills
- A friend might hit you up for a loan

Your marriage can be impacted, too. Shared decisions about how to spend, give and invest the new wealth can create friction. Before you got rich, your money was used largely to pay the bills and save some for the future. Now, with a lot more, the myriad of possibilities can create confusion and misalignment between spouses.

Sudden wealth can also impact new relationships. Are new friends—and, especially, new potential romantic partners—interested in you, or your money?

Four ways sudden wealth can be ruined

People who experience sudden wealth can also fall into several traps that can quickly erode or eliminate those assets. These wealth destroyers can impact anyone of course, but they tend to affect the suddenly wealthy more frequently.

1

GIVING AWAY TOO MUCH MONEY.

If you give too much of your wealth away, you can end up in your own precarious financial position faster than you might imagine. Even loaning money can prove problematic and occasionally disastrous.

2

EXTRAVAGANT SPENDING.

There is nothing wrong with treating yourself well and enjoying a good life. But if the money needs to last a long time, excessive spending can jeopardize your financial future. The key is to identify the necessities, the “nice to haves” and the “not that important,” and then spend with prudence.

3

POOR INVESTING AND PLANNING.

If you receive a windfall, there may be a lot of professionals seeking to help you manage your money and address your planning needs. There is a high probability that many of these professionals are going to be “Pretenders” who aim to do a good job but are simply not talented enough to help you.

4

LAWSUITS.

Your sudden wealth can make you a target for unscrupulous litigants. One way to address this possibility is by safeguarding your assets. By working with a wealth manager who is well-versed in asset protection planning, you can potentially insulate yourself from prospective deceitful and ruthless litigants.

Take responsibility

If you or a loved one is fortunate enough to become suddenly wealthy, here's a process to help you, or your loved one, get prepared to further your success.

- ASSESS YOUR SITUATION. You need a solid understanding of how much money there really is, and what you need and want to do with it. Often that requires slowing down and working through some of the emotions that accompany sudden wealth in order to think rationally about the windfall and its impact. Your purposes, a wish list, a balance sheet and a cash flow statement can all play a part in evaluating where you are and what you are considering.
- RELY ON CONSUMMATE PROFESSIONALS. You want to work with true experts—recognized authorities who understand the difficulties you face due to becoming suddenly wealthy, and who are able to help you chart a financial course that matches your needs and wishes. Consummate professionals can also act as a sounding board when it comes to most aspects of dealing with your newfound wealth. Their extensive experience, expertise and ability to see your situation rationally rather than emotionally can be useful in helping you think through different concerns, situations and plans.
- MAKE REASONED DECISIONS. To make a windfall work best for you, you need to make intelligent and informed decisions, such as avoiding impulse purchases which often lead to buyer's remorse. Moreover, it is important to identify and determine what constitutes "living a good life" to you. Once you have defined that, you can better center on your purposes for money and make specific decisions to fulfill those purposes. Without first knowing your purposes, you can't implement appropriate strategies to amplify your success.

DISCLAIMER: THIS REPORT IS INTENDED TO BE USED FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES ONLY AND DOES NOT CONSTITUTE TAX, LEGAL OR INVESTMENT ADVICE. DAVID WITTER AND FINANCIAL HARVEST WEALTH ADVISORS ARE NOT AFFILIATED WITH AES NATION, LLC.

David A. Witter, CFP®

Founder and CEO

Financial Harvest Wealth Advisors believes in helping our clients "pass their rocking chair test." Many years from now, when you are sitting in your rocking chair reflecting back over your life, what would you have accomplished, who would you be with and where would you be to say, "that was a good and satisfying life"?

Call us today if you have experienced, or soon will experience, a financial windfall to center on your purposes, plan effectively and amplify your success.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT: PORTIONS OF ARTICLE WERE PUBLISHED BY THE BSW INNER CIRCLE, A GLOBAL FINANCIAL CONCIERGE GROUP WORKING WITH AFFLUENT INDIVIDUALS AND FAMILIES AND IS DISTRIBUTED WITH ITS PERMISSION. COPYRIGHT 2019 BY AES NATION, LLC.